

He And She

© 2014 Will Stanley

He could see the need for companionship
She was free and agreed to a partnership
They both had a dream, which involved becoming a team
So they started to say make way we're more than he and she.

When they began to expand into a family
Where each must share all the care they can possibly Command, they had arrived, can only hope, they will thrive
The impact, of their contract, is tacked onto he and she.

That's the way the world is supposed to work
Man and woman, a network
It's the thing that makes the world go round and round
And helps us keep both feet on the ground.

Now they know how to allow each one to grow
When time and again one of them sends out a quid pro quo
They take it with a grain of salt, even though it's a pain, it's nobody's fault
So then, lover and friend, a blend of he and she.