

Loving You

© 2020 Will Staley

I recall like it was yesterday, the first time I saw you cry
It almost broke my heart in two, and I felt like I'd just died
But over time, as I got comfortable with how you grieve
I knew for sure that I could never leave

But now we're facing real hard times, and we're both under duress
And I keep trying to lift your spirits and minimize your stress
So with that in mind I have something I'd like to say
To help you drive those demons far away.

*Tomorrow is a new day
It might be a blue day
Or even a gray day
But either way
It will be the next day
Of my loving you
Loving you.*

It's easy to forget just how much we've been blessed
Until we're forced to compare our lives with all the rest
It's a common western world blind spot
Until TV shows us those who have not

Life's tiny indignities dominate our thoughts
And we feel we've been belittled by every undeserved cheap shot
But before we plan revenge and sweet payback
Listen, can you hear life's laugh track?
Chorus

Let's not take life so seriously
Instead we'll focus on what counts
I want to live and love so furiously
That we'll forget all those lame put downs

Instrumental

So wipe away those tears and let's go out on the town
And change expressions to a smiley face from a frown
We've had katharsis, and that means it's time for a big hug
So come over here and kiss your big lug.

Chorus
